Painters' Characteristics Interestingly Revealed in These Notes.

To the great good fortune of the mem bers of the Aldine Club and their friends the club has received the loan of the G. H. Buck collection of water colors for an indefinite period. In honor of the installation of the pictures the club gave a reception yesterday afternoon, followed by dancing. The collection as a whole is so interesting, contains so many works of merit and suggests so many points of view that it is to be hoped an arrangement may be made by which the public may be admitted to see it.

Mr. Buck's collection is retrospective and exclusively American. He began making it more than twenty years ago, and practically every prominent America: painter who ever dipped into water color, with the exception of the great John S. Sargent, is included. One hundred and eighty-five artists are represented each with one work. Of the 185 artists seventy-five are dead, so that already the collection begins to have a historical as well as artistic significance. A majority of the pictures are accompanied by photographs and autograph, letters of the artists, which add greatly to their interest. Although these notes, which are framed in with the pictures, are short for the most part, nearly all of them reveal characteristic traits. Winstern the process of the control of low Homer's, for example, will amuse those who already know of the forbid ding traits that developed in the great recluse. Mr. Buek, at that time enected with the magazine Truth, written requesting permission for a cer-tain article.
